

WHO

- Hosted annually by CSTD (The Canadian Society for Training and Development).
- CSTD is a national, not-for-profit membership association serving the field of workplace learning and development with 2,500 members drawn from the public, private, not-for-profit and labour sectors. www.cstd.ca

WHAT

- A week-long celebration of learning in the workplace
- Businesses, governments and not-for-profit organizations share their learning initiatives with their employees and the public.
- Senior business leaders outside of training and development who actively advocate and support learning and development in the workplace are recognized as Learning Leaders.

WHEN

- September 21-25, 2009 (Monday through Friday)

WHERE

- Organizations and municipalities from coast to coast have declared their participation and support for this initiative.
- From presentations to poster displays to employee awards, companies across the country are recognizing the role of learning in contributing to Canada's economic development.

WHY

- To raise awareness of the impact of workplace learning on business outcomes
- To celebrate the best practices of workplace learning
- To celebrate the success of the 'learning organization'

For more information, visit: www.cstd.ca
or contact Lynn Johnston, President, CSTD
ljohnston@cstd.ca
1-866-257-4275, ext. 25